It would perhaps had been well if Mr. Ki: ig hail grappled with the issue between this point of view and the utilitarian; it would have given fibre to this part of the book, which at present is, and was seemingly meant to be, dogmatic. Mazzini's conception of nationality is of value just at present. The honour of a country depends more on removing its faults than on boasting of its qualities. Patriotism is intense regard for a country's moral greatness. Nationality depended on this sentiment, but it implied a regard for the international division of labour, and a recognition of special aptitudes and special missions on every hand. The European Federation which was to stand upon this basis, and toward which the regeneration of Italy was...
