He became a soldier, and he led a very good and holy life, a life such as Christ s own soldiers should lead. He was sent to the city of Amiens in France. It was the depth of winter, and the snow lay thick upon the ground, and young Martin was riding with his companions through the city. They were all very merry and very happy, and, when a poor old beggarman passed them, and entreated them to take pity upon him and help him, all of them passed on--all but one--and that one was Martin. Already he had given away all the money he had, but he felt he could not turn away from the poor, half-starved, half-clothed old man. What could he do? Another minute, and he took his sword, and cut his soldier s cloak in two, and gave...
